On November 30, 1864 the Confederate Army of Tennessee launched a series of disastrous frontal assaults against entrenched Union forces around the town of Franklin, Tennessee. The carnage that ensued staggers the imagination, with seven-thousand rebels, one in three, falling as casualties before the blazing entrenchments. The recriminations for the Confederate disaster at Franklin began almost before the smoke cleared.

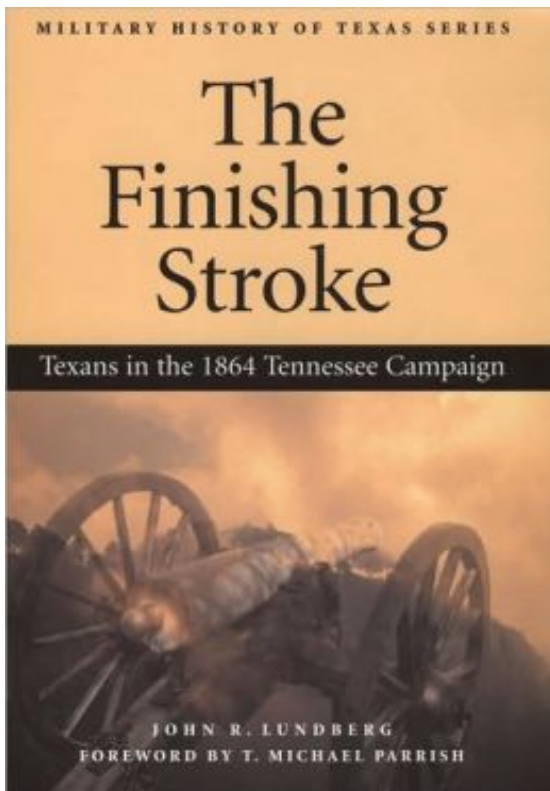

Historians have examined the Battle of Franklin with the assumption that had the outcome been different or had the rebels won the contest, the Civil War might have ended differently, but was that a possibility? Historians have also blamed John Bell Hood for the disaster, but was he responsible? The consciousness of the slaughter at Franklin has lingered in the annals of Civil War history but why? In addition to an account of the battle itself, I will endeavor to answer all of these questions in my presentation.

OCTOBER QUIZ

By Jim Godlove

150 years ago this month, the regiments that would eventually comprise Granbury's Texas Brigade were recovering from the Battle of Chickamauga. During that battle, the brigadier general in command of most of these units was instantly killed when stuck in the chest by an artillery shell.

Who was this Alabaman who had graduated from West point in 1854?

OCTOBER BOOK RAFFLE

By Donnie Stowe

Hope everyone had a great time out at the Hess Club for our first meeting this year. Onward to our raffle for our meeting in October. We begin with ROADS to ANTIETAM by John W. Schildt. We need to thank Joe Goulding for this volume. The second book for this month is AMERICAN BATTLEFIELDS by Hubbard Cobb. This book is a complete guide to the Civil War conflicts in words, maps & photos and comes to us from Ron Featherston. The third book this month is also from Ron – SOUTH OF APPOMATTOX by Nash K. Burger and John K. Bettersworth. Our final selection is IN THE HANDS OF PROVIDENCE – Joshua L. Chamberlain & the AMERICAN CIVIL WAR by Alice Rains Trulock. This book comes from Norm Lewis. As a special treat (not a trick – Halloween), I'm also raffling a Civil War novel – MANSE by Wilton Earle. In this book the author creates a powerful literary interpretation of a complex man and the forces – both internal and external that drives him.

Members are encouraged to donate some of your well read books or a small monetary donation for purchase of books to continue a valuable support to the HCWRT Raffle.

LETTERS TO THE BRIGADE

To The HCWRT Membership:

My advancing age has many blessings but it prevents my attendance at the meetings and I reluctantly will not be renewing my membership. I have enjoyed the meetings, meals, and especially the members and I have been impressed by the quality and the balance of the speakers, all making a pleasant experience.

With my best regards,

Howard "Pat" Patton."

POET'S CORNER

To the Survivors of Hood's Brigade

By Judge Mijamin Priest

Brave men, the remnant of a host,
Who fought through fire and blood,
Until the last, last hope was lost,
Firm to the lost cause stood.

Though beaten, yet the future age,
Will not forget your story,
You'll dazzle the historic page,
With deeds of martial glory.

As long as shines the Southern sun,
Your deeds will be remembered,
Yes, till what has been thus begun,
This government dismemebered.

The government may pass away,
As others have before it,
And others live to see the day,
Look back, and still adore it.

But your brave deeds will never die,
Will live while nations perish,
Both friends and foes alike will vie,
Your gallantry to cherish.
