Speaking on:
Grant's Overland Campaign 1864
(The Conclusion)

Last year, we journeyed with Grant and Lee in the spring of 1864 as they grappled with one another in the Wilderness and around Spotsylvania House. This year we will follow them as they maneuver to the North Anna River, where Lee will once again stymie the Army of the Potomac with a clever wedge-shaped formation, arranged so as to split the Union juggernaut in half and give Lee a chance to engage at least part of the Federal force with parity of numbers. Fortune will intervene, and Lee will fall ill with dysentery and find himself unable to deliver the attack he so ingeniously arranged.

After three days of stalemate, Grant will break the impasse with a midnight withdrawal, pulling his army across the North Anna and sidling southeastward along the Pamunkey River. Lee will respond by interposing between Grant and Richmond, and the mounted arms of each force will lock horns in a day-long cavalry battle at Haw's Shop. The armies will stare each other down across Totopotomoy Creek until the martial center of gravity shifts a few miles south to a strategic intersection called Old Cold Harbor. There Grant will almost achieve a breakthrough on June 1 and, emboldened by his near success, venture a massive frontal assault on June 3. His failure to breach the strong Confederate defenses will bring Grant's monolith to a grinding halt.

Undeterred, Grant plans yet another offensive, dispatching his cavalryman Phil Sheridan on a raid to cut the railroads north of Richmond and plotting a movement by the Army of the Potomac to slice the remainder of Lee's supply lines by capturing Petersburg. Grant's maneuver from Cold Harbor to Petersburg is a masterpiece of military logistics, but the culmination of the operation - an assault against Petersburg's defenses by Baldy Smith's 18th Corps, supported by Winfield Hancock's 2nd Corps - proves a disappointment.

We will close with a rousing discussion of the comparative generalship of Grant and Lee and a debate over which of those generals "won" the campaign.

Sabine Pass Spring Field Trip

By Barry Brueggeman

This year we will have a Spring Field Trip to Sabine Pass Battleground State Historic Site on Saturday, April 25.

We will meet at the Home Depot at 13400 Market St. (I-10 @ Uvalde), Houston, at 8:00 am and be driven by bus to Port Arthur where we will visit the Museum of the Gulf Coast at 10:00 am.

The Museum of the Gulf Coast combines conventional and unconventional methods to tell the exciting story of the Texas / Louisiana Gulf Coast region. It has numerous historic and cultural artifacts and is well worth visiting.

After spending an hour at this museum we will drive to Sabine Pass where we will have a box lunch at the Sabine Pass Community Center and see a presentation on the USS Clifton and its distinctive walking beam engine by Justin Parkhoff, the archeologist who is heading up conservation efforts for Clifton's sister ship, USS Westfield. Clifton was the primary Union steamer involved in the Battle of Sabine Pass and is the subject of some exciting new research.

We will then travel a short distance to reach the Battleground. The battleground has recently been updated and is in better shape than ever. At the battleground we will have a comprehensive tour by Ed Cotham. We will start by reviewing the role of the Sabine Pass Lighthouse (still standing on the Louisiana side of the Pass - you may want to bring binoculars) and the skirmishes around it.

We will then go to the scale model of Fort Griffin and cover the battle itself. We will then go to the Clifton's walking beam (recently moved to the park and displayed there) and talk about the naval side of the battle. We will visit the Union and Confederate monuments and honor the veterans who served. We will also visit the Sabine Pass Cemetery and talk about the role of the civilians in the aftermath of the battle.

We plan to return to Houston about 5:00 pm. Cost of the trip is $90 per person.

Checks can be made out to HCWRT and mailed to Barry Brueggeman, 3706 Lonnie Wood Drive, Houston, TX 77059.

You can contact Barry by email at: Fieldtrips@HoustonCivilWar.com.

IN MEMORIAM

Lee Adams, age 74 and a member of the Round Table for the past several years, died of a sudden heart attack at College Station on February 13, 2015. It's somehow fitting that Lee died in College Station following his attendance at an Aggie baseball game, because Lee loved Texas A&M and was a dedicated fan of all Aggie sports, especially football.

A native Houstonian, Lee graduated from St. Thomas High School. Passing on football scholarships to both Rice and the Naval Academy, Lee entered Texas A&M in 1959 and graduated four years later with a business degree. Lee and Betty Leatherwood were married on June 1, 1963, and Betty survives her husband as does their daughter, Carroll Ann Adams.

After brief service in the U.S. Marines, Lee began a distinguished 49-year career in the rice industry, retiring as President of American Rice, Inc. four years ago. Lee held many positions in the rice industry, including Chairman of the USA Rice Millers' Association and Chairman of the USA Rice Federation.

Lee was an active member of St. Laurence Catholic Church in Sugar Land, and his funeral was held there on February 20. Inurnment took place recently in the Adams' family plot at historic Morton Cemetery in Richmond.

APRIL QUIZ

By Jim Godlove

The Overland Campaign is also known as the Wilderness Campaign after the first historic battle between Generals US Grant and RE Lee. Among the over 25000 casualties was a South Carolinian general. He was accompanying Gen. Longstreet on a reconnaissance of the Federal position. In an eerie parallel to the wounding of Stonewall Jackson the year before and near the same spot, Confederate soldiers fired on Longstreet's party. Longstreet was severely wounded while this general was mortally wounded.

Who was this 28 year-old officer?

LEE SURRENDERS TO GRANT

APRIL 9, 1865 - APPOMATTOX

Lee arrived at the McLean house about one o'clock and took a seat in the parlor. A half hour later, the sound of horses on the stage road signaled the approach of General Grant. Entering the house, Grant greeted Lee in the center of the room. The generals presented a contrasting appearance; Lee in a new uniform and Grant in his mud-spattered field uniform. Grant, who remembered meeting Lee once during the Mexican War, asked the Confederate general if he recalled their meeting. Lee replied that he did, and the two conversed in a very cordial manner, for approximately 25 minutes. The subject had not yet gotten around to surrender until finally, Lee, feeling the anguish of defeat, brought Grant's attention to it. Grant, who later confessed to being embarrassed at having to ask for the surrender from Lee, said simply that the terms would be just as he had outlined them in a previous letter.

The terms would parole officers and enlisted men but required that all Confederate military equipment be relinquished. The discussion between the generals then drifted into the prospects for peace, but Lee, once again taking the lead, asked Grant to put his terms in writing. When Grant finished, he handed the terms to his former adversary, and Lee -- first donning spectacles used for reading-- quietly looked them over. When he finished reading, the bespectacled Lee looked up at Grant and remarked "This will have a very happy effect on my army." Lee asked if the terms allowed his men to keep their horses, for in the Confederate army men owned their mounts. Lee explained that his men would need these animals to farm once they returned to civilian life. Grant responded that he would not change the terms as written (which had no provisions allowing private soldiers to keep their mounts) but would order his officers to allow any Confederate claiming a horse or a mule to keep it. General Lee agreed that this concession would go a long way toward promoting healing. Grant's generosity extended further. When Lee mentioned that his men had been without rations for several days, the Union commander arranged for 25, 000 rations to be sent to the hungry Confederates. After formal copies of the surrender terms, and Lee's acceptance, had been drafted and exchanged, the meeting ended.
